(U) Two distinct but related parallel systems are used by most hostile services conducting classical espionage operations. Cover positions at embassies, trade and press representations, missions to international organizations and airline and tourist bureaus are exploited by "legals." Although often involved in clandestine and illegal activities, these intelligence officers are officially recognized as legitimate foreign officials and are "legally" present in the host country, hence the term "legal cover." Many, especially those in various diplomatic capacities, enjoy immunity, thus insuring that even if caught red-handed, at worst they will be declared persona non grata and sent home. In many instances even legals who do not enjoy diplomatic immunity escape imprisonment and trial because of political considerations. Widely publicized espionage incidents tend to strain relations between countries; thus, frequently, it will appear to the advantage of the victimized government to avoid such difficulties by quietly requesting a compromised intelligence officer to exit.
General Considerations

(U) Espionage involves the clandestine collection of information. It must frequently be conducted in a suspicious if not openly hostile environment. Intelligence officers must be capable of dealing with and controlling persons who will be committing serious crimes on behalf of a foreign power. Methods of operation largely involve varying approaches to the complex problems of spotting, assessing, recruiting, motivating and training of persons to betray their own governments. Sustaining a successful operation requires considerable expertise in espionage trade-craft. Spies must receive adequate support in the form of documentation, funds and equipment. Most important, secure but effective channels of communication, both ways, must be established to ensure continuity and productivity. Soviet influence over the other bloc intelligence services is reflected in their essentially similar methods of operation.
APPENDIX HOSTILE ESTABLISHMENTS IN FRANCE

(U) Official and many quasi-official Soviet, Albanian, Bulgarian, Cuban, Czech, Hungarian, PRC, and Romanian establishments in France are identified in this appendix. The two types of representations are listed together by city; their sequential presentation implies no relative degree of importance. Occasional changes in the location as well as size of these establishments can be expected.
